Ford Sierra RS Cosworth 500

1987

The Ford Sierra RS Cosworth 500, launched in 1987, is a highly sought-after performance car known for its racing pedigree. Limited to just 500 units, this special edition was designed to meet homologation requirements for Group A racing.

Powering the RS Cosworth is a turbocharged 2.0-liter inline-four engine, producing around 220 horsepower, allowing it to achieve impressive acceleration and top speeds. The car features rear-wheel drive and a five-speed manual transmission, offering engaging driving dynamics.

Distinctive styling elements include wider wheel arches, a prominent rear spoiler, and unique decals, setting it apart from standard Sierra models. Inside, the car has sport-focused features, such as supportive bucket seats and a driver-centric layout.

The Sierra RS Cosworth 500 is celebrated not just for its performance but also for its iconic status in the automotive community, making it a legendary model among enthusiasts and collectors.
